Update: Kapolei Interchange Phase 2

Completion slated for early 2019

lhe Kapolei Interchange is heading to an early 2019 completion of Phase 2, weather permitting, says the Hawaii Department of Transportation. This will mark another milestone in the progress made over 10 years since construction started on the massive interchange project in 2009. Phase 1, which was completed in 2011, provided new H-1 Freeway onand off-ramps in both eastbound and west bound directions, thus improving access and traffic flow in and about the City of Kapolei.

Phase 2, now under construction, will include additional ramps and a new overpass from the Wakea Street extension to west-bound lanes on H-1 Freeway. So far, improvements include paving Farrington Highway fronting the water park, and construction of a new overpass barrier and ramps. Most of the drainage systems and water facilities have been installed or relocated, and new destination signs have been added. The aerial photograph shows current construction on new bridge girders and relocation of electric utilities. To finish the project, the contractor will complete the bridge superstructure and add the final concrete overlay and pavement for all bridges and ramp surfaces. Future phases, including Phase 3 which is fully designed and awaiting highways construction funding, and Phase 4, will expand the Palailai Interchange and connect to a new state highway serving Kalaeloa Harbor.

The Kapolei Interchange is a federally funded project, and is a public/private partnership between the State of Hawaii and Kapolei Properties Division.
